about

The CAHSI Allyship program pairs students in the fundamental courses with student allies (those who have completed data structures) for the success of females in computing

Protégés: undergraduate students pursuing computing-related majors enrolled in computing fundamentals courses.

Allies: Students who have completed fundamental courses in computing-related majors and who are passionate about diversity in computing.

The benefits of the program include learning about resources, growing from shared experiences, connecting with students in your major, learning from professionals and receiving a small stipend.

While the primary focus of the program is for students who identify as women and are enrolled in computing-related majors, all students who strive for excellence in inclusion are encouraged to apply.
